The outward migration resulted in a lower tax base for city and local authorities already struggling to meet the need for increased social services, policing, health care and housing repair. What are the lessons to be learned and how can the problems be avoided through design in the future? This makes it possible to make informed speculations about search patterns of offenders in certain circumstances and the likely places where offences could be committed.

There is often a large difference between experienced and imagined safety. It shows how, through integrating simple crime prevention principles in the design process, it is possible, almost without notice, to make residential environments much safer. The defensible space theory applies to the different levels of acceptance that exist in order for people to be in different kinds of space. With very few exceptions, crimes do not happen at random, because offenders choose one target in preference to .
