It is not an instructional tool. They were enthralled and so excited about meeting you.

Will kids want books or FREE autographed book stickers? I then told them that everyone forgets or has trouble following the rules sometimes, and in this classroom, when that happened to someone I would help them out in several ways, including using words or a nonverbal cue to remind them, having them come sit next to me—or having them step away from the action to pull themselves. Remembering this distinction will assist you in knowing when to use it, how to apply it, Time Out for Teachers how to present it to your students. More importantly, it shows the child how effective taking a break can be, which encourages them to choose that option themselves in other frustrating situations.
