This passes for comic relief in a film otherwise notable for its witlessness. Not once does she experience this passion with Raoul, yet she finds him to be the better pick, hinting that it must be some sort of societal influence along with the fact that the Music Of The Night starts killing people, of course. Charles Hart, a young and relatively unknown lyricist was invited to rewrite the lyrics, even contributing almost solely to an unplaced tune by Lloyd Webber, which later became "Think of Me".
