Until now, econometricians have favored fixed-effects approaches, and sta
One question is whether value-added models used in place of, or in addition to, other methods will help reduce those risks. Kenneth Chelst is a professor of operations research and director of engineering management programs in the Department of Industrial and Systems Engineering at Wayne State University. The decisions include buying a car, picking a supplier or home contractor, selecting a technology, picking a location for a manufacturing plant or sports stadium, hiring an employee or selecting among job offers, deciding on the size of a sales force, making a late design A Value Added Decision, and sourcing to emerging markets. A recurring message throughout the workshop was that value-added models cou
